

HUNG UP

Move over, Mona Lisa. Twenty-five-year-old Carla Terwilleger, better known as "Twiggy," is taking the art world by storm with her paintings of champagne-sipping, eye-batting, bikini-wearing glamour girls. Inspired by glossy fashion magazines, haute couture and the ultra-chic women she observes in Los Angeles, where she now lives, Twiggy has a unique gift for turning a night on the town into a collector's item. Her bold, ebullient works often begin as doodles on cocktail napkins. She then breathes life and energy into them on canvas using ribbons, glitter, squeeze paint, and old beads and jewels from her grandmother's extensive costume jewelry collection. While she's garnered legions of fans, one of her biggest is her long-time hairstylist, Janis Harvey, owner of Studio 151 in Louisville, KY, where Twiggy went to college. Harvey has one Twiggy original hanging in her salon over the reception desk and six more on display at home.
